MARKET REVIEW

Listed property had a very strong March with the ALPI up 4.4%, however it wasn't enough to bring the quarter into positive territory where it sat at -1.6%. Equity and bonds, however displayed the converse with marginal positive returns for the month, but both managed to finish the quarter in the green. It was surprising that the local bonds even managed a slight positive performance as the US Treasury Bill raced through the 2% mark to finish the month at 2.35%. The local bonds only saw a slight expansion in yields, perhaps reaffirming our view that the positive real yield carry was enough to buffer the local bond market from volatility.

Globally the conflict in the Ukraine still dominates the headlines, however Covid snuck its way in with several countries seeing a case spike with China being the most notable as they once again enforced a strict lockdown in specific regions. Both the conflict and lockdowns have further hampered the global supply chain and with it pushed inflation. This will undoubtedly generate upward pressure to global bond yields, which generally provide a headwind to property valuations.

The first results season of the year concluded on a generally optimistic tone. Distribution growth and net asset values on a weighted average basis were up 3.3% and 2.0% respectively. The key themes include (1) like-for-like growth in net property income remains weak owing in part to persistent pressure on the cost line, (2) the office sector remains under pressure although there has been a pick-up in the level of enquiries in the first quarter, (3) the recovery in trading densities in larger shopping centre formats has not yet translated into improved reversions, (4) dividend policies for some stocks remain uncertain but pay-out ratios have improved slightly, and (5) LTV's have steadied at comfortable levels on the back of further disposals as well as a stabilisation in asset values across all asset types. The invasion of Ukraine by Russia had initially led to pressure on the CEE counters but much of the initial sell-off in MSP was reversed. NEPI Rockcastle was also impacted by once-off litigation costs (15% of earnings) and subdued earnings forecast by management.

Despite the headwinds experienced, we still feel, based on undemanding valuations, that the sector can achieve low double digit returns for the next 12-months, barring any considerable escalation to the Ukrainian crisis.
